Description of Nevada Business Operations

The brewing process will use a variety of milled grains (malted barley, oats, wheat, etc.) to produce a sugar solution (wort). The solid milled grains are separated, leaving only wort. The wort is then boiled, during which time hops are added, and then cooled and fermented using yeast (the wort has become green beer). During fermentation, the yeast will create ethanol and CO_2 , along with other metabolites contributing to the flavor. Additional hops and other flavor contributing ingredients may also be added during or at the end of fermentation. At the end of fermentation, the green beer will go through filtration, depending on style, and be carbonated. This will then be packaged for potential sale at the brewpub and other appropriate channels, where licensure permits.
